A parent approaches the help desk, __21__ frustrated as she searches for a gift for her daughter. She asks why “the Girls’ Department” isn’t easier to locate. This seems like a perfectly __22__ and simple question, doesn’t it? However, behind this thinking __23__ a deeper issue worth discussing. Traditionally, some toys are marketed for boys, and __24__ toys target girls. __25__, items are grouped and divided by gender. However, toys with this kind of categorization might push kids toward certain roles. Dolls and cooking sets, for instance, teach domestic roles to girls. On the other hand, toys like balls encourage boys to be good at sports. Such __26__ labeling can limit children’s development and keep them from exploring and growing. Companies such as Lego have taken note of this problem and realized the danger of __27__ gender stereotypes. They decided to take action and remove such gender bias __28__ all its products. The company named Mattel __29__ is known for producing Barbie dolls, once focused on looks or jobs chosen for girls. Similarly, it now has also changed its direction and designs its dolls in different sizes and careers. Many stores are also taking small steps toward giving children equal choices when it comes to buying toys. By avoiding __30__ to stores with sections designated for each gender, parents can contribute as well!

When I was an exchange student in Taiwan, __31__ a “ban-doh”, a kind of traditional banquet, was a special experience for me. Unlike the banquets back in the US, such celebratory meals were far from my expectations. While the banquets in the US are usually hosted in churches or large dining halls, the ones in Taiwan __32__ right out on the street. When I arrived, I saw guests __33__ at large round tables. No one seemed __34__ the fact that the banquet itself occupied nearly half the street. There were also many cooks working hard to prepare large plates of __35__ food. Interested in such a tradition, I asked my host parents how the custom __36__ in the first place. He explained that back then when people wanted to celebrate an event, everyone in the __37__ would work together to set up a “ban-doh”, including preparing ingredients for the meal, contributing cooking skills and providing chairs, tables and utensils. __38__ it was usually quite late when the banquet ended, hosts would give guests torches to help them light their way home. The guests would then stroll home __39__ torches and bags of leftovers in their hands. Over time, “ban-dohs” have somewhat changed, but the spirit of people coming together and enjoying a good time still lives on. Overall, I’m really glad to be able to participate in a “ban-doh.” Even when I’m back to the US, I think I will surely remember __40__ such an awesome event.

Many scientists have warned that human beings are going to run out of natural resources, oil and gas in particular, in the following decades. That's the reason why the price of fuel is getting higher and higher in today's developed societies. Additionally, burning oil and gas will cause our environment to be seriously polluted, and a terrible side effect of this will be continued climate change. Therefore, energy problems have become a widely discussed issue around the world in recent years.

It is believed that solar power will be an important source of energy, and human beings will have to increasingly rely on it in the future. For one thing, solar energy is eco-friendly. Since sunlight is directly converted into solar energy, there is little risk of harming our environment by using it. For another thing, sunlight is free. The sun has continued to give us "free" energy day in and day out, so we don't have to make an extra effort to generate power. Thus, some people predict that every house in the future will have on its roof a couple of solar panels, and they can provide enough electricity to give the people living inside enough heat and light. What's even better, if there is any surplus electricity, they can sell the additional power to the electric companies. There is no doubt that with more and more people and companies starting to make use of sunlight, solar energy will become cheaper and more efficient. In fact, it is likely that solar energy will help us solve some of the most urgent problems the world now faces.

43. In what kind of book would you most probably read this passage?
- (A) A fashion magazine. (B) A romance novel.
(C) A technological journal. (D) A geography textbook.
44. What is the passage mainly about?
- (A) The economic decline human beings are facing.
(B) The idea that solar power will be one of our most important sources of energy.
(C) The seriousness of our current energy crisis.
(D) How to set up solar panels on the roofs of houses on our own.
45. According to the passage, which of the following statements is NOT true?
- (A) It is believed that oil and gas are eco-friendly fuels.
(B) Solar power could be an essential source of energy.
(C) People can make use of solar power to get enough electricity.
(D) More and more people are paying attention to the world's energy problems.
