(II) Life isn't easy for teenagers today. Not only is there an ever-expanding world of information to learn and memorize, but there is also a social world online that can make day-to-day life more complicated.

Many teenagers are social media experts. From Snapchat to LINE, YouTube to Instagram, there are always people to connect with online. However, the question is whether there can be too much of a good thing.

The answer is yes. While social media used in healthy ways can help lonely people make friends and find people who share their interests, unhealthy usage can cause a lot of problems. Social media can distract people from studying, keep them awake at night, spread misinformation, and increase the risk of cyberbullying.

Some good suggestions might be to go out and meet with your classmates face to face, limit the time you spend on social media, and use social media as a tool for keeping in touch without making it your main focus of the day. A little time online goes a long way, so be smart and switch off sometimes.

(A) To encourage teenagers to join more online social groups.
(B) To give advice on balancing social media use with daily life.
(C) To explain the history of social media in the modern world.
(D) To show different apps that teenagers like to download.
55. What does the author mean when he writes “A little time online goes a long way” in the final sentence?
(A) Even limited time online can always control the whole world.
(B) Even limited time online can always provide perfect information.
(C) Even limited time online can suddenly make students famous.
(D) Even limited time online can be extremely useful.
56. Where is the article most likely to appear?
(A) In an online magazine that deals with the history of social media.
(B) In a school newspaper that shares tips for students' healthy habits.
(C) On a school website that shares tips on using social media wisely.
(D) On a shopping website that sells clothes for teenagers at low prices.
