Failure is natural in life. No matter how hard you try, at some point, there's a good chance you are going to experience failures. Some will be small and you'll recover quickly, while others will feel like the world is ending. But even the biggest challenges can be overcome by taking the following steps.

The first thing you should do when you fail is to accept your own responsibility. Failure can be extremely frustrating and depressing. These strong emotions may trick you into blaming others for your failure. Instead, remind yourself that even though the fault is yours, it's only human to make mistakes. Next, make sure that any damage caused by your failure has been mended. For example, if you've hurt anyone, apologize. After that, it's time to move into a positive frame of mind. Remind yourself of your past successes. Then, stop thinking about the past and switch to the future. What can you learn from your failure? What is your new goal? Allow these questions to lead you as you move forward.

Manage your failures well and you'll succeed next time. As Robert Kennedy once said, “Only those who dare to fail greatly can ever achieve greatly.”

40. What is this reading mainly about?
- (A) How to experience fewer failures.
 - (B) Steps to overcome failure.
 - (C) The damage caused by failure.
 - (D) Examples of experiencing failures.
41. According to this reading, what's the first thing we should do when we fail?
- (A) Apologize to those hurt by us.
 - (B) Remind ourselves of past successes.
 - (C) Accept our own responsibility.
 - (D) Blame others for the failure.
42. Why does the author mention Robert Kennedy's words in the last paragraph?
- (A) To explain that there are many different kinds of failure.
 - (B) To show that Robert Kennedy also failed many times himself.
 - (C) To point out the best way to become wealthy.

(D) To prove that failure plays an important part in one's success.
